The SLU Medical Home Difference

The SLU Medical Home is different from other medical practices in three unique ways.

Team Approach
In the SLU Medical Home, a family doctor with experience treating patients of all ages leads a team of health experts who each bring different skills to the patient care experience. A social worker, dietitian, physical therapist, pharmacist, occupational therapist, nurse practitioner, physician’s assistant, medical assistant and care manager all work together to evaluate and treat the individual needs of each patient. This team of health professionals meets weekly to determine the necessary level of each discipline’s involvement to track your progress toward becoming or remaining healthy. Coordinating all aspects of your care is a nurse with extensive clinical experience and advanced education who serves as your personal health care manager, making sure you are as healthy as possible.

Care Guidance
In addition, if you need specialized care, the SLU Medical Home is supported by all the resources of SLUCare and Saint Louis University Medical Center to ensure that you receive the level of care necessary to maintain or return to good health. At all times, the SLU Medical Home team will continue to be involved with your care by managing specialist consultations, reviewing results of visits and guiding you through the health care system.

Group Education and Support
Another unique component of the SLU Medical Home is group education, in which patients who have similar health issues can come together for classes. Depending on the needs of enrolled employees, classes may include diabetes education, nutrition, weight loss, exercise options, ways to adapt skills of everyday living, managing medications, understanding insurance options and counseling.
